Institutional Development Plan (IDP)

The Institutional Development Plan (IDP) serves as a strategic roadmap for higher education institutions (HEIs) to enhance institutional growth, improve academic performance, and ensure compliance with national education policies.

It provides a structured framework for institutions to assess their current status, set long-term goals, and implement systematic improvements in key areas such as curriculum design & development, faculty training and development, research, innovation and intellectual property, and student support and development services.

IDP plays a crucial role in the compliance of performance indicators by HEIs for the accreditation processes, governance efficiency and overall institutional excellence. By integrating IDP enablers into their strategic planning, institutions can strengthen their academic standards, enhance faculty and student engagement, improve research output, and align themselves with national frameworks such as NEP 2020, NAAC accreditation, and NIRF.
